Oct. 4 marks the three-year anniversary of the public launch of Brilliant Future: The Campaign for UCI, the most ambitious fundraising and alumni engagement effort in UCI’s history. To date, alumni and friends have raised more than $1.3 billion and engaged over 52,000 alumni – more than two-thirds the goal of 75,000 by 2024.

This past fiscal year, there was an 80+ percent increase in the amount given by Anteater staff and faculty. Emeriti and retirees specifically continue to be amazing partners and supporters, and they have given generously as part of the Brilliant Future campaign.

One of these outstanding donors is professor emeritus Hung Fan who, with his husband Michael Feldman, made a bequest worth an estimated $1.5 million. It will be split equally between the Department of Molecular Biology and Biochemistry, Fan’s home department, and UCI’s Cancer Research Institute, the basic research arm of the Chao Family comprehensive cancer center that Fan founded and directed for 3 decades.

“I look at UCI as being a community,” Fan says. “If you can, you need to give back to your community.”

Others share his sentiment. Cloud Hseuh, the previous director of Student Affairs at the Clair-Trevor School of the Arts, created the Cloud Hseuh Foundation Scholarships that provide undergraduate students (in their second, third or fourth year) a $3,000 award based on merit - one in each of the four departments: art, dance, drama, music. With this gift, Hseuh makes an impact on the next generation of creative leaders at UCI and has established a meaningful way to stay connected with the school and its students after retiring.

These are just a couple of the amazing stories which highlight the impact of UCI’s emeriti and retirees.

“We are incredibly grateful to our many emeriti and retiree donors who continue to invest in our brilliant future,” said Brian Hervey, vice chancellor for University Advancement and Alumni Relations and president of the UCI Foundation. “When they give as former employees of the university, they are signaling to others that this is a place they care about, that this was more than just a job.”
